VIRTUAL EXHIBITION

EXHIBITION NOTE

People often talk about nature as though it exists somewhere far away, in forests, mountains, oceans, places separate from ordinary routines. But most human lives are filled with small interactions with the natural world every single day, even in cities.

Birds gather on electrical wires. Plants grow through concrete. Light changes the mood of a room by the hour. Weather shapes memory more than people realize.

Flora and Fauna stays close to those kinds of observations. The artists in this exhibition approach nature from very different perspectives. Some focus on detail and physical form, following textures, movement, colour, and repetition closely. Others move toward atmosphere and emotional association, where landscapes and creatures begin carrying feelings that are harder to describe directly.

The exhibition does not ask viewers to arrive at one fixed interpretation. Instead, it leaves room for personal connections and memories to enter the work naturally. A certain landscape may remind someone of childhood. An animal may feel symbolic to one viewer and completely ordinary to another.

That openness is important here.

Flora and Fauna is ultimately interested in attention, in looking more carefully at the living systems, environments, and small details people gradually stop noticing once they become part of everyday life.
